Businessmen concerned in making executive decisions often make reference to the authoritative Business Review published monthly by the Bank of Montreal. Experience has taught them they can rely on this concise report for factual information and for accurate interpretation of economic developments affecting their particular business interests.

This monthly diagnosis of the current Canadian economic scene is prepared at the B of M's Head Office by economists having the sources and the experience of Canada's first bank at their disposal. If you feel it would be of value in your work, a note to the Commercial Services Manager, Bank of Montreal, P.O. Box 6002, Montreal, will put you on our regular mailing list.

It takes bank branches to grow a full harvest of profits in Canada

For centuries Canada, the second largest country in the world in area, has been both an invitation and a challenge to the world's alert businessmen. The invitation lies not only in the wealth and diversity of Canada's resources but in an ever-enlarging market for goods of all descriptions.

The continuing challenge is in how to reach this vast market which stretches from the Atlantic to the Pacific—along the U.S. border and north beyond the Arctic Circle.

The solution reached by thousands of firms has been to rely for dependable information and extensive services upon a Canadian bank whose hundreds of branches blanket Canada from coast to coast. With over 1350 such watching posts—more than any other bank—and with over $6½ billions of resources, Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce has the facilities to provide these services.

We invite your inquiry on any specific problem incident to your business operations in Canada, now or in the future. Your letterhead request will also bring your copy of "Doing Business in Canada" a book which overseas industrial and commercial executives have found especially useful.

INTRODUCTION

Canadian Trade Index has been the authoritative guide to buying and selling in Canada for over 65 years. It contains a comprehensive list of Canadian manufacturers having more than a local distribution for their products, irrespective of membership in The Canadian Manufacturers' Association. The Index always keeps up-to-date with the buying and selling needs of the times and it can be safely stated that it is the foremost directory of its kind in Canada today.

This new edition is designed to give you a detailed account of over 12,800 manufacturing companies across Canada. Listed for your easy reference are company name, address, names and titles of operating executives, branch offices and plants, brand names, parent and subsidiary companies, foreign representatives, number of employees, a geographical breakdown of manufacturing establishments by province and city and a finely classified directory of Canadian made products.

With approximately 10,000 detailed product classifications, the Index will ordinarily enable prospective purchasers to get in touch at once with manufacturers of the goods desired. Where specialized information is needed, buyers are invited to call on the services of the Commercial Intelligence Department of the Association. It is suggested that importers abroad should first communicate with the nearest Canadian Government Trade Commissioner, consulting the list of their addresses in Appendix I of the Export Section. Representatives of overseas firms visiting Canada are invited to call at the Head Office of the Association where they will be given every possible assistance.

Users of the Index will find the regular advertising sections invaluable in supplementing the information contained in the alphabetical and classified sections. Advertising page numbers are indicated opposite the classified and alphabetical listings of advertisers and, in addition, your attention is invited to the Classified Advertising section beginning on page G8. For other classifications of advertisers see Table of Contents on page 3.

At the beginning of each section you will find a detailed description of how the Index may be used to its fullest advantage on your behalf.

The publishers wish to thank the manufacturers, government departments, and other organizations who have furnished information upon which this book is based.

FORGED!

When much is expected of a part, great strength, high resistance to shock, long service with complete reliability — all without undue bulk, and at an economical cost — forging is the method.

The forging process develops the maximum mechanical properties in a material — greater values in these properties than are obtainable by any other metalworking process.

Allow a Dominion Forge engineer to evaluate your requirements. As one of the largest forging manufacturers in Canada we are geared for massive quantities for the automotive industry as well as a small industry's requirement.

BEARIUM METAL . . .

NOW AVAILABLE IN CANADA

YOUR BEST BUY IN BEARING BRONZE

Non-Seizing and Non-Scoring . . . Long Life . . . High Compressive Strength . . . Self-Lubricating . . . Low Coefficient of Friction . . . resistant to Shock Loads . . . Sound, Uniform Structure . . . Free-Cutting.

Available in rough cast bars, individual castings and completely machined parts.

Even where water must be used as the only lubricant, BEARIUM METAL does not seize or score the shaft. The reason is that BEARIUM METAL, because of its superior frictional properties, is self-lubricating. Secret of its amazing performance is due to the uniform distribution of microscopic particles within the copper-tin grains rather than between the grain boundaries as found in ordinary bronzes. So, if you have a bearing requirement which calls for dependable, trouble-free performance — then BEARIUM METAL is your best buy in bearing bronze.

Only one company—Torrington—can supply you with this complete range of antifriction bearings.

(1) Drawn Cup Needle Bearing. Maximum radial capacity in minimum cross section. Easily positioned by press fit.

(2) Drawn Cup Roller Bearing. For high speeds and long, pregreased service life. Unit construction means easy assembly.

(3) Heavy-Duty Roller Bearing. Combines high-speed performance, long pregreased service life, high shock resistance. Press or slip fit installation.

(4) Cage and Roller Assembly. Self-contained unit holds rollers in place, permits ease of handling and installing.

(5) Track Roller Bearing. Used as roller under heavy loads at slow speeds. Corrosion protection is insured by chrome-plating the outer diameter and cadmium-plating other exposed surfaces.

(6) Needle Thrust Bearing. Specifically for thrust loads in restricted space. Runs directly on adjacent hardened and ground surfaces, or on standard thrust races.

(7) Roller Thrust Bearing. For heavy loading parallel to shaft axis.

(8) Cam Follower. Regular or sealed. High-capacity antifriction performance on cam-controlled or track-type equipment. Withstands heavy rolling, shock loads.

(9) Single-Row, Two-Row & Four-Row Tapered Roller Bearings. Regular or steep-angle design. Top bearing efficiency in handling severest thrust and radial loads. Advanced heat-treating insures high impact resistance and optimum wear.

(10) Self-Aligning Ball Bushing. Accommodates misalignment while supporting heavy radial, thrust or combined loads.

(11) Cylindrical Roller Bearing. For heavy radial loads. Controlled contour rollers eliminate roller end stress concentration, insure uniform load distribution.

(12) Spherical Roller Bearing. Self-aligning: provides both radial and thrust capacity. Insures top efficiency, optimum service life under heavy loading and misalignment conditions.

(13) Spherical Roller-Bearing Pillow Block. Split housing for ease of installation, inspection. Suitable for grease or oil bath lubrication. Optional stabilizing ring for fixed or float bearing positioning.

(14) Ball Bearing. Designed for high radial capacity. Can take combined radial and moderate unidirectional thrust loads.

If you need coppermetals — in the form of sheet, strip, plate, tube, rod, special wire or extruded shapes, specify Anaconda. You can be sure of getting the one that's right for your requirements.

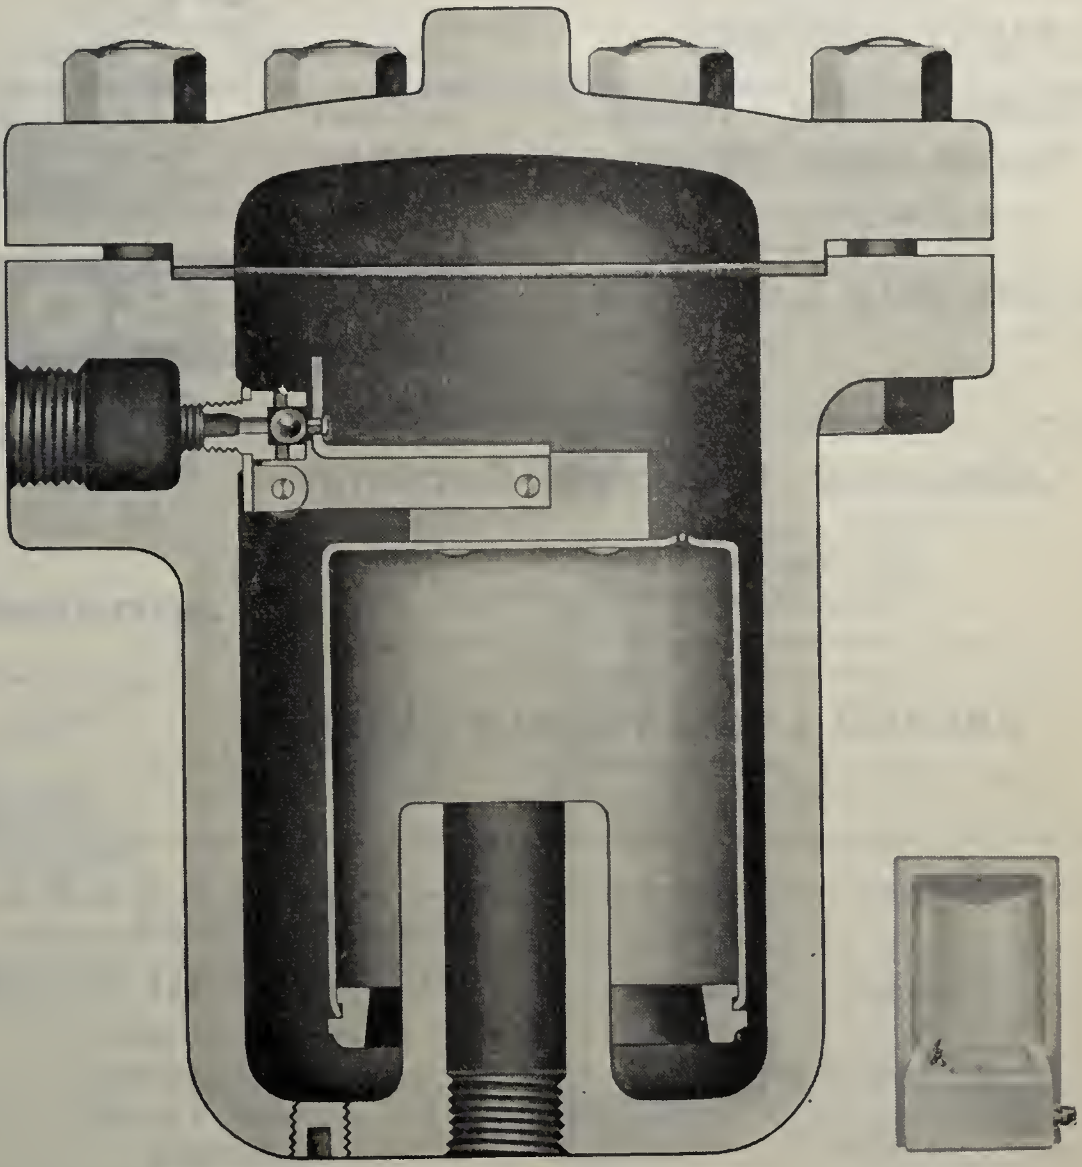
CANADA'S LARGEST RANGE OF COPPER MILL PRODUCTS



Thirsty factories...thirsty people

For you, water is at its refreshing best when it comes cool and bubbling from a handy fountain. Factories are often different. In some cases, water is the last thing they want. That explains the Steam Trap in our illustration: Its job is to make sure that all condensed water is taken out of a steam line.

Other factories, of course, need specially treated water. They want it softened, or subtly altered in some precise way. We do that, too. In fact, wherever water goes to work in Canada you can find Crane products in control. From municipal waterworks to the smallest water fountain, and throughout the whole spectrum of industry, the Crane name stands for durable competence—and a design flair that puts beauty into the most unexpected places.

Look to Crane Canada Limited for excellence in any product or system for the control and management of fluids.

Department of Trade and Commerce
Ottawa, Canada

Foreword

By Hon. Robert H. Winters, M.P.
Minister of Trade and Commerce

1967 is a big year in Canada. Centennial Year programs from coast to coast and the staging of Expo 67 in Montreal make this a certainty. It is my hope that 1967 will also be a big year for Canada in the world at large.

Encouraged by the success of Canadian businessmen in improving export performance year by year, the Government has set a challenging target for Centennial Year — an increase in Canadian exports to $11¼ billion. Last year they were $10.27 billion.

I am confident that Canadian exporters will meet this target. To this end, the Department of Trade and Commerce has taken special steps to support their efforts, as well as to enlist new firms in export. ESP* is the campaign symbol under which Government and industry have united to attain this demanding export objective.

ESP* symbolizes the Export Sales Potential that Canadian producers of goods and services possess. It invites such producers to join the Department in an Export Sales Partnership designed to translate their latent potential into dynamic Export Selling Power. And it serves as a reminder that successful exporters Enjoy Substantial Profits.

As one means of making it easier for Canadian firms to join in a concerted export offensive, the Department began 1967 by opening a nation-wide communications network that puts businessmen anywhere in Canada in immediate touch with the Trade and Commerce office nearest them. Exporters or potential exporters who live in Ottawa or any city where the Department has a regional office, need only dial the local number indicated in their telephone directories. Those living outside these centres simply dial the long distance operator and ask for ZENITH 0-1967. They will instantly and automatically be connected to the nearest regional or headquarters office — toll free — to enquire about their export prospects.

If the regional office does not have the needed information, it is available from Ottawa or from the appropriate Canadian trade posts abroad by telex. The answer will be quickly obtained and communicated.

To bring prime marketing intelligence even closer to the Canadian businessman, senior Canadian trade commissioners from around the world came to Canada in April and remained until June to take part in "Operation Export 1967". At Montreal, Vancouver, Edmonton, Saskatoon, Winnipeg, Toronto, Halifax and

Saint John, N.B., they set up headquarters in hotels so that businessmen in all parts of Canada could arrange private interviews to discuss their individual export problems in specific markets with the men best qualified to find solutions.

In April, too, the Department opened an Ontario regional office in Toronto, to give business and industry in the province more direct and convenient access to federal trade information and help in planning export programs.

The Department, of course, has no monopoly on export expertise. Experienced exporters in the Canadian business community have first-hand, up-to-date, practical knowledge which can help other exporters and potential exporters and be of great assistance to the government in developing its export promotion program. To draw on this assistance, I formed an Export Advisory Council early in 1967, composed of prominent Canadians drawn from major areas of commerce, finance and industry, and including members of our universities and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and other national business associations. The Council will examine, from the businessman's point of view, the Department's services and facilities and recommend new initiatives which can further the export interests of Canadian companies. The members will also give export leadership in their sectors of business activity. Future trade promotion activities will undoubtedly reflect the thinking and the experience of this highly qualified management group.

During the past eighteen months, the Department has worked with business specialists in many phases of foreign trade, to produce a modern Canadian-oriented textbook on exporting. The book, entitled "How to Win World Markets", is available from Queen's Printer bookshops across Canada. Published in both paperback and hard cover binding, the volume provides detailed information on all main phases of exporting.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association plays an active and welcome role in export promotion in Canada. Several of its Departments work closely with member firms in stimulating and assisting their export activities. The Canadian Trade Index, published by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, performs an important supporting service. This year, more than ever, its concise description of export methods and practices, its bibliography on exporting and its listing of Canadian Government trade posts abroad will be of special value to companies considering, for the first time, the prospect of venturing into foreign markets. The Index is a treasure trove of product information. When distributed abroad by Canadian trade commissioners, it provides a unique service in assisting foreign buyers to locate and do business with manufacturers across Canada.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association deserves the gratitude of the Canadian business community for its publication of the Trade Index. I know that many Canadian businessmen will benefit from it during our Centennial Year, to the advantage of their own affairs and to the lasting benefit of Canada's export trade.

EXPORTING IS A CHALLENGE

Foreign trade is one of the pillars of Canadian prosperity, and offers a challenge to enterprising firms engaged in the production of commodities for which markets may be found in other countries. Canada is in fifth position among trading nations of the world, and the preservation of her stable economy depends to a large extent on the ability to export the products of her factories, fields, fisheries, forests and mines.

As more than one-fifth of the Gross National Product consists of goods and services supplied to other lands, it is readily apparent that a large proportion of Canada's population is engaged, directly or indirectly, in foreign trade. During the last thirty-five years, there has been a gradual shift in the composition of our exports from raw to processed materials. As a result, goods classed as crude materials represented only about 19 per cent of total domestic exports in 1966, food, feed, beverages and tobacco 19 per cent, while fabricated and end products made up almost 61 per cent of the total.

Export trade yields the best returns to firms that maintain continuity of supply. Experience has shown that those most likely to succeed are engaged in a well-established domestic trade, and have an assured production which permits them to create a favourable reputation and develop a demand for their products in other lands.

Experience is the prime requisite for any individual embarking on export trade, followed by capital. The latter may be dissipated rapidly without the former. Foreign tariff and import restrictions, transportation procedures, currency and finance problems, and packaging and documentation are a few of the shoals on which such a venture into uncharted waters may founder. Capital is necessary to tide over the intervals between the time services are rendered or shipments made and the time payments are received. It is also necessary to meet unexpected demands that may be experienced. However, with the wide variety of assistance and guidance readily available to businessmen, the problems are not as complex as is sometimes feared.

Prospective exporters might well consider the following fundamental questions before embarking on what can prove to be a rewarding voyage of discovery:

Does our business lend itself to export, or are the products we manufacture suited only to the domestic market?

Does the capacity of our plant meet the domestic and possible foreign demand for our product? What proportion of our output can be made available for shipment abroad on a continuing basis?

What countries are now purchasing products similar to those being manufactured in our plant?

What is the volume of their purchases, and their sources of supply?

Are these items being imported because they are not being produced in the countries concerned, or because of a temporary shortage?

If similar products are being made in the countries where a consumer demand exists, are local manufacturers protected by a tariff on imports, by import quotas, or by some other device?

Does some special feature of the Canadian product provide a marketing and merchandising advantage in other countries?

Are payment problems likely to be experienced due to a shortage of dollars?

Are carrier services adequate with transportation costs sufficiently low to overcome possible domestic competition and competition from other countries? Are products of a bulk and value ratio which could best move via air freight? Negotiation of commodity rates for recurring shipments is possible.

Which markets have a growth potential?

What Canadian firms are presently exporting to the countries concerned, and are Canadian products highly regarded there?

Are there any Canadian export regulations that apply to the products it is proposed to export?

Export trade has national significance. It involves a live interest in the countries concerned, courtesy in the transaction of business with overseas customers, integrity, and a continuity of vigorous service, which contribute to the creation of a favourable reputation for the firm and its representatives. Goodwill engendered by one or more Canadian companies also leads to the development of friendly relations with Canada.

IMPORTANT POINTS FOR SUCCESSFUL EXPORTING

1. Make firm long-term export plans.
2. Manufacture and supply the right product for the market.
3. Institute a simple and logical system of costing for exports.
4. Offer reasonable credit terms.
5. Employ personnel who are experienced in export and travel and who know the languages.
6. Visit customers through regular trips overseas, and do not attempt to organize exports solely from the desk in the home office.
7. Support your product and your visits to customers abroad with attractive multi-lingual promotional literature and advertising.
8. Use the right approach in your overseas dealings; acquaint yourself with local conditions and customs; make your contacts in a friendly manner; diligently avoid the "hard sell" approach.
9. Never commit yourself to an arrangement you cannot fulfil. Nothing does more harm than to fail to live up to undertakings on prices, or on deliveries and servicing of export customers.
10. Exhibit at trade fairs abroad.

HOW TO EXPORT

EXPORT is not merely an extension of domestic trade. Each market has its own peculiarities in taste, customs and business methods. A full understanding of the basics of export is therefore necessary, and an appreciation of the problems of your overseas customers needed.

On the following pages some of the principles and methods to be employed in the export trade are outlined. Expert assistance is yours merely for the asking at every stage of the export business. Later in this section you will be acquainted, in detail, with the export services available from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Department of Trade and Commerce. The material following is not meant to serve as a comprehensive manual of export practices. Its primary purpose is to indicate broadly some of the matters to which the exporter, or prospective exporter, should give serious consideration.

EXPORT DISTRIBUTION AND MARKETING

By Ivan E. Lessard, M.I.Ex., Executive Director, International Patented Products.

Export business can be undertaken and organized in many ways. Usually, the penetration of foreign markets will start with shipments abroad from the Canadian plant. Later on, perhaps, the nature and volume of business might justify manufacturing abroad, either under license or by direct investment in factories located abroad.

The first step therefore is to obtain market information. It is essential to obtain accurate background information about the markets where business is contemplated. Market surveys can take many forms, depending on the information required. They vary from the most simple questionnaires covering such basic matters as: import restrictions; prevailing local prices; volume of current business, etc.; to highly specialized surveys to establish precise detailed information.

Basic data required in the initial stages leading to decisions as to whether business is possible, can be supplied through many channels, including the Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the chartered banks, etc. To provide information for more sophisticated market surveys requires either personal visits to the market or the services of foreign trade consultants, international market survey organizations and in some cases a combination of all.

The results of the market survey should also determine the best methods to be employed for obtaining maximum distribution. Distribution methods will vary considerably, depending on the characteristics of the market, as well as the product involved. In some large European countries, or nations the size of India, it is usually desirable to deal with separate areas as individual market units within the total territory. These considerations might also arise in smaller countries, although in most cases it is possible to locate companies which can offer national distribution for most products.

There are several types of organization which should be considered before definite marketing plans are decided upon. Some of the better recognized export distribution organizations are: export agents or brokers located in Canada; commission agents; importer-wholesalers; distributors.

Export Agents or Brokers Located in Canada

Most of the major centres of Canada have a number of companies specialized in export distribution. These companies vary from large international trading organizations, specializing in a few products, to companies dealing with a wide variety of merchandise. In some cases these organizations purchase for their own account and pay cash on delivery in Canada for all transactions, while others develop business on a commission or fee basis.

Some of these companies specialize in certain markets only, while others have connections in most important export markets. Some have their own offices abroad but in most cases export companies in Canada employ local agents abroad. By representing a number of Canadian exporters they are in a position to spread travel and other expenses, thus enabling the Canadian manufacturer to benefit from lower overhead expenses, as well as specialized export knowledge. In most cases credit risks are either completely eliminated or reduced to the absolute minimum. Export agents can also cut down on transportation expenses by combining shipments and thus obtaining the most favourable freight rates.

There are also a number of export companies in Canada operating as combination export managers. Such companies act for the manufacturer as his own export department would do. Doing export work for a number of manufacturers, overhead expenses are shared and the manufacturer does not have to employ export staff of his own.

Commission Agents

Most countries offer a large number of organizations who represent foreign companies on a commission basis. These companies act as the manufacturer's own sales staff. In small countries these companies will handle a wide variety of products. In larger countries and more complex marketing territories, these companies become highly specialized in the types of goods they handle. In some European and Latin American countries, specialization reaches a high degree, whereby a commission agent in textiles, for example, will deal only in printed cotton goods.

Commission agencies vary considerably in size. They might be one-man operations, or they could employ over 100 salesmen of their own. In most cases, the established firms in the country have wide connections in the trade. They are very familiar with the basic requirements of the market. They sell direct to wholesalers, or in some cases direct to retailers, and expect to be reimbursed with a commission already included in the price offered to their customers. Rates of commission will fluctuate from a fraction of one percent to as much as 15% or 20%, depending on the product involved, the established customs in the trade and the functions the commission agent is expected to perform.

Depending on the arrangements concluded, the commission agent might be prepared to bear all costs of advertising, or leave such expenses to the manufacturer. In some cases the agent will be responsible for credit, while in other agreements all credit risks are to be the concern of the exporter. In the latter case, the exporter has the right to confirm or reject orders received from the commission agent.

Importer-Wholesalers

In many countries there are companies who purchase for their own account and offer distribution throughout the area in which they operate. In some small countries these organizations can offer national distribution but in larger countries, they will restrict their activities to a very specific marketing area. In general one can expect a reasonably high degree of specialization. These companies also employ a number of salesmen and sell direct to retail outlets. It is not uncommon for such companies to have a chain of retail outlets of their own, in addition to selling to other retailers in the trade.

Purchases will be made for the importer's own account and in such cases it is quite customary for the importer-wholesaler to undertake some advertising. Advertising and point of sale promotion expenses might be exclusively for the importer's account, or the exporter might allow for a promotion arrangement based on volume or some other consideration.

As a general rule, these companies expect to be appointed on an exclusive basis for a definite period of time. If most of the advertising is for the exporter's account, it might be possible to make non-exclusive arrangements. These companies can be expected to provide full service if the product involved requires some maintenance or periodic replacement of parts.

Distributors

The function of distributors differs greatly from country to country and from product to product. In general, distributors import direct only after the line has already been well introduced and offers reasonable turnover. In most cases distributors will not undertake direct advertising but will be active in the sales promotion field. This type of organization will engage in the highest degree of specialization and offers opportunities for the deepest market penetration. Exclusivity in clearly defined marketing areas might, in some cases, be requested, although it is not uncommon to be able to deal with most, if not all, distributors in the trade.

Except in most unusual cases, credit terms will be requested. These will vary in length of time, depending on general economic conditions prevalent in the country. Some distributors expect a fair proportion of their inventory to be financed by the exporter.

While the clearly defined marketing facilities outlined above are based on generalization, in many countries some of these functions tend to overlap. A combination of functions can be attained for some products in some markets. Each case should be closely examined and all factors carefully analyzed before binding commitments are agreed upon. In some countries the laws offer definite protection to local agents and make it extremely difficult to make changes in agency arrangements.

In general a commission agent or importer might be prepared to restrict his activities to the products of one manufacturer only in the field, particularly when the arrangement is of an exclusive nature. Distributors on the other hand will likely handle competitive products as well.

Often local manufacturers are prepared to act for the sale of allied products not manufactured by themselves. Such arrangements can lead to subsequent licensing agreements for manufacturing in the country involved. The advantages of dealing with an allied local manufacturer could be considerable and should lead to exchange of technical information, product development, etc.

Packing and Packaging

It is the responsibility of the exporter to see to it that goods shipped abroad arrive in good condition. Facilities for loading and unloading differ greatly in many ports of the world. In most cases today vessels can unload alongside, although there are still many important ports in the world where cargo must be lightered. Under any circumstances allowance must be made for adequate packing before the goods leave the manufacturer. To some extent the extra cost of heavy packing, where necessary, may be offset by the high local resale value of packing material. (See also comments under "Shipping and Marine Insurance.")

Air cargo is becoming a most important factor in foreign trade. Savings can be instituted, not only by elimination of heavy packing, but also by reducing local inventory costs through the shortening of the supply line.

Local tastes and preferences should be carefully considered in packaging. Wherever possible, printing should be in the language of the country of destination. Some countries impose a package tax when goods are landed and these considerations could be of utmost importance in meeting existing competition.

Sales Training

One of the most difficult problems facing the exporter is to provide adequate training to the people abroad who are expected to sell his product. The problem becomes multiplied when the product involved requires a degree of technical background and after-sales service. Difficulties in translating installation or service literature also tend to complicate the picture.

Some companies solve this problem by inviting key personnel of overseas representatives to spend some time in Canada and obtain the necessary technical background first hand. Such trained personnel are then expected to educate sales and service staff locally. The cost of such training is usually borne by the exporter. Other companies employ travelling company representatives who do the training abroad. Travelling service representatives, on the payroll of the manufacturer, can also fill a most useful function.

The importance of clearly worded technical literature in the local language can not be overemphasized. In certain cases it is possible to have technical instructions permanently marked on the product in question and these should be, wherever possible, in the local language or dialect.

Training of Home Office Export Personnel

Export trade is becoming more and more the function of specialists. It is commonly believed that it is better to have an export specialist than a person very familiar with the product to be sold abroad. This is based on the theory that the export specialist will be able to obtain the necessary product knowledge more rapidly than would be the case in reverse.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association offers helpful facilities for the training of export personnel through the monthly meetings organized by its Export Study Clubs in New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and British Columbia. (See comments under Export Services of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.)

FINANCING EXPORTS

By Edward R. Ernst,
Bank of Montreal.
General Manager,
International Banking.

THE MAJOR portion of Canada's foreign trade is financed and facilitated by the chartered banks under arrangements with their foreign branches and correspondent banks abroad. This system provides Canadian importers and exporters with a smooth-working efficient banking service at reasonable cost. Besides making outright advances against bills of exchange supported by documents of title covering both incoming and outgoing shipments, banks in Canada offer their customers a comprehensive range of financial and information facilities. Such services have been developed throughout the years to meet demands created by the steady growth of Canada's foreign trade.

In addition to financing the Canadian trader, an important share of our export trade is financed for foreign banks on a sight or short-term basis. In these cases, the Canadian exporter receives payment upon presentation of specified documents to the Canadian bank concerned, the latter relying upon receipt of settlement in due course from its correspondent bank.

Foreign Departments

All the Canadian banks have well-established administrative foreign or international departments in their head offices to deal with the many problems presented by international trade and payments in a constantly changing world. This reservoir of up-to-date information on political and economic conditions in every country of consequence is readily available to customers anywhere in Canada through a network of branches. As well as furnishing a comprehensive range of information facilities, including advice on financing procedures, these departments enable branches to ease the day-to-day problems of Canadian traders in many respects. The functions and operations of these head office departments have been augmented from time to time to meet the changing needs of those engaged in foreign trade in all parts of Canada. Our Bank, for instance, has sent representatives periodically to practically every part of the world since the last war to gather information at first hand to improve our services to the public.

Credit Risks

In export trade, as in the domestic market, the seller must assess the credit risk and quote terms of sale accordingly. In foreign trade, however, the normal risk must be considered in conjunction with the financial standing of the country of destination. The buyer may be perfectly willing and able to pay in his own currency, but, if his country suffers from a chronic shortage of foreign exchange, and particularly of dollars, the Canadian supplier may be faced with lengthy delay in obtaining settlement. He may even suffer outright loss.

Where buyers and sellers have an inter-company relationship or are otherwise well and favourably known to each other, and where there are no serious exchange transfer difficulties, exports are often arranged on an open account or consignment basis. Such sales are generally settled by mail or cable transfers through banking media and present no particular financing problems. These transactions are known as clean payments, and a large volume of these payments is handled daily by Canadian banks on instructions from correspondent banks around the world. Cash with the order is another relatively simple and effective method of settlement. This procedure is, however, seldom used in these highly competitive days.

The Documentary Draft

A large and growing proportion of Canadian export trade is financed by means of sight or time drafts drawn by shippers on buyers abroad. Such drafts are known as bills of exchange. They are usually accompanied by documents of title consisting of commercial and customs invoices, marine insurance policy or certificate, and a full set of ocean bills of lading, made out to the order of shipper and endorsed in blank — or, in other words, in negotiable form. In the case of sight drafts, these documents are normally released to importers only against payment, but when thirty-day or longer-time drafts are used, surrender of documents usually takes place solely on the strength of the importer's written acceptance on the face of the bill. In every instance the exporter must supply his bank with complete collection and settlement instructions.

The export may be financed by discount of the relative bill of exchange at the exporter's bank at time of shipment. Alternatively, the bill could be handed to the bank with instructions to collect before making settlement. Still another financing procedure is for the Canadian exporter to pledge the bill to his bank as partial or full security for a general line of credit.

Principle of Documentary Drawings

The basic principle behind documentary drawings is the fact that the seller is satisfied to start the goods on their journey before they are paid for, but he wants to be assured of payment before they actually pass into the physical possession of his customer. If the bill is drawn payable at so many days after sight or date, the buyer's written acceptance definitely establishes his obligation (but not necessarily his ability) to pay at a fixed maturity date. Apart from the exchange conversion feature, which is a serious factor in some countries, the main risk in use of document draft procedure is that the buyer may refuse or be financially unable to honour the drawing. Where the draft has been drawn at sight, dishonour usually results in expensive warehousing and other costs for the seller, pending disposal of the goods to another buyer, possibly at a substantial loss. The drawer's position in regard to non-payment at maturity of an accepted time draft is even more insecure, because the goods have already passed into the hands of the buyer and probably have been disposed of to third parties. Costly legal proceedings, followed by partial if not complete loss, are often the result.

It is, therefore, evident that Canadian exporters should be fully satisfied not only with the reliability of buyers but also that foreign exchange resources and general economic conditions in the country of import will permit prompt settlement. Reports on the credit-worthiness and general reputation of foreign firms may be obtained by airmail or cable through your own bank anywhere in Canada. Similarly, the branch of the bank you deal with has ready access to the latest foreign economic and other practical information available at the international department of its head office.

The Bank Act

The financing of Canada's exports not only covers the period between shipment of goods and final settlement from abroad but also begins at the first stages of domestic production. Under the provisions of Sections 86 to 90 of the Canadian Bank Act, the chartered banks are enabled to provide a large volume of short-term working capital to industry and commerce. The purpose is to facilitate the complete series of operations, from processing of raw material to finished product and to eventual disposal of surplus production in markets abroad. In fact, these sections of the Bank Act, which had their origin in "an Act granting additional facilities in commercial transactions" passed by the Parliament of the old Province of Canada in 1859, constitute the very backbone of our industrial production financing and, in turn, have an important bearing on the flow of our export trade.

Commercial Letters of Credit

The history of commercial letters of credit dates back to the earliest days of banking. Their origin is credited to Roman and Lombard money-changers who also are believed to have introduced the bill of exchange. While there are various definitions of letters of credit, the following one, I think, most aptly describes the purpose of the instrument: "A bank issuing a letter of credit furnishes its credit, which is both good and well known, instead of the buyer's credit, which may be good but is not so well known". The wording of definitions may differ but the basic fact remains that the establishing bank gives its own undertaking to pay to sellers stated sums of money against delivery of certain documents within a prescribed time.

Commercial or documentary letters of credit may be issued in various forms but, generally speaking, they fall into two main categories:—

IRREVOCABLE CREDITS, which constitute a binding and irrevocable obligation on the part of the establishing bank to honour drawings issued in conformity with terms of the credit. Such credits may not be cancelled or altered without the consent of all parties concerned. The Canadian bank through which the credit has been forwarded will add the following clause on the relative advice to the beneficiary:—

> "This letter is solely an advice of credit opened by the above mentioned correspondent and conveys no engagement by us."

It is the practice, however, of many Canadian exporters to require the written assurance or firm undertaking of a bank in Canada that credits issued by a foreign bank will be honoured in due course. For instance, the issuing bank abroad may not be well known to the Canadian beneficiary or perhaps the importing country has a difficult exchange position which conceivably could interfere with performance of the issuing bank's undertaking. Provided, of course, it is instructed to do so by its foreign correspondent, the Canadian advising bank then assumes complete responsibility for the credit by adding the following undertaking to its letter of advice to the beneficiary:—

> "We hereby confirm this credit and thereby undertake that any drafts drawn and accompanied by documents in order will be duly honoured upon presentation."

REVOCABLE CREDITS, otherwise known as "Authority to Pay" or "Authority to Purchase". These instruments authorize payment to the beneficiary upon presentation of draft and specified documents — subject, however, to modification or cancellation without notice to the beneficiary. Such credits serve mainly as a means of arranging payment and afford the exporter very little protection. They are used infrequently and only where sellers have implicit confidence in the buyer's ability and willingness to carry out terms of sales contracts. The wording of these credits and any relative letters of advice should include this clause:—

> "This credit is subject to revocation or modification at any time without notice to you."

Uses of Letters of Credit

The importance of commercial letters of credit and their usefulness generally in world trade warrants more detailed mention of their functions and use. First, it should be clearly understood that they deal with documents but not goods. Neither the negotiating bank in Canada nor the issuing bank abroad can accept any responsibility whatsoever for the quality or other characteristics of the underlying goods, but they must ensure only that the documents are made out strictly in accordance with the terms of the credit. It follows that the importer should satisfy himself thoroughly through his bank of the general standing and reputation of the exporter before placing the order. Second, even an irrevocable credit offers limited, if any, protection to the exporter, who is unable to meet the terms of the credit in every respect. If discrepancies occur in documents which cannot be corrected in time for delivery and the exporter furnishes the negotiating bank with a guarantee he has, in effect, automatically signed away his rights under the credit. In other words, the foreign importer if he chose could refuse to take delivery of the documents because they did not agree with his requirements as outlined in the credit. It is easy to imagine what might happen if there had been a sharp drop in the price of the goods following placement of the order.

Canada now subscribes to a code of procedure governing commercial letters of credit transactions known as the "Uniform Customs and Practice for Commercial Documentary Credits." The United States and many other countries have operated under this code for years, with Canada and most other countries in the Commonwealth adopting the code recently. Also, the National Foreign Trade Council Inc., New York, have issued a useful pamphlet containing definitions of trade terms and abbreviations.

The Foreign Exchange Risk

If the exporter sells for Canadian dollars, the exchange risk falls on the foreign importer, but if payment is to be made in the currency of the importer's country, the prudent exporter will protect himself against exchange rate fluctuations between the time of sale and of settlement. This he can do by selling a future to his bank for delivery at the approximate time the foreign funds are due for payment. An uncovered exchange position could easily cost an exporter not only his trading profit on the goods but a substantial loss besides.

Export Financing

Export credits insurance is a subject in itself but it plays such an important part in the development of Canada's export trade that it deserves special mention. Under the provisions of a policy issued by Export Credits Insurance Corporation (ECIC), an arm of the Canadian Government, the exporter is able to insure his shipments against most of the principal risks of loss. The Corporation will insure up to 90% of the contract price at a moderate premium and these facilities, when pledged to the exporter's bank, materially ease financing requirements. Coverage under ECIC Policies has been considerably broadened in recent years and rates of premium are now one-third of what they were when ECIC was originally established.

ECIC is also authorized to provide unconditional guarantees to banks, thus enabling exporters to obtain non-recourse financing for sales of capital equipment sold on medium term credit. Under this bank guarantee facility, normal ECIC insurance principles relating to sales of capital goods on medium term credit continue to apply. The insurance Policy provides cover to the exporter during the production period of the goods but once the buyer has accepted the goods the unconditional guarantee to the bank goes into effect, enabling the bank to waive recourse to the exporter. This arrangement provides the lending bank with ECIC's 100 percent guarantee of the deferred payment portion. ECIC retains the right of recourse against the exporter for the recovery of any moneys it pays to the bank which would not have been payable under the insurance Policy. For this bank guarantee ECIC charges a nominal fee.

EXPORT PRICING

By Richard B. Spiro, former Vice-President, International Division, The Canadian Coleman Company, Limited.

The subject of export pricing embraces the principles of price calculation and the method of quotation. The former is of prime importance in establishing prices which will be competitive in the foreign market, while still allowing an adequate return to the exporter in terms of contributing to the profit of his overall operation. The latter is concerned with the necessity for quoting in such a way that the overseas customer can readily calculate his landed cost and compare it with competitive offerings; in short, it makes it easy for him to buy.

Calculation of Export Prices

While export prices will necessarily bear a fairly close relationship to domestic prices, and will perhaps need adjustment in the light of prices of competitive merchandise, the theoretically correct method is to calculate prices based on the actual cost of producing, selling and shipping the goods, providing, in addition, for the coverage of general overhead expenses and an adequate net profit.

These costs may be divided into three general classifications:

(1) Direct materials and labour (at standard or normal costs applicable to the product being offered, less drawback of duties paid on imported components or raw materials).

(2) Factory overhead (which should be calculated and apportioned on the basis of the average of the plant capacity occupied in the production of goods for export).

(3) Sales and general overhead.

In every business there are many items of cost which are not especially attributable to any particular phase of the operation, but which must be covered if the business is to operate at all. In tabulating costs for export purposes, every effort should be made to eliminate those costs which do not bear any direct relation to the export operation. The examination can be made particularly searching in those businesses where export sales form only a small proportion of total sales.

The expenses of the export operation itself will include such items as: Export department salaries, travelling expenses, catalogues and promotional literature, export advertising, commissions to travellers and to representatives abroad, transportation to the agreed point of delivery (see below), packing and shipping materials and labour, legal expenses, patents and trademark fees, office supplies, postage and cables, taxes, rent, insurance, interest and exchange, provision for bad debts, etc. The tabulation of the expenses and the preparation of a budgetary Profit and Loss Statement will permit the export executive to arrive at quotations based on factory cost by indicating the percentage mark-up which must be added to factory cost to cover the expenses of the export operations and to produce the desired margin of net profit.

Fixed and Variable Costs

In the analysis of costs and expenses it will be found that certain items will be characterized as fixed charges and are independent of production or sales volume. Others vary directly and automatically with the volume of goods produced and sold, while a third variety may be described as controllable and bears a more or less direct relation to the volume of business. Examples of "fixed" charges are civic taxes, administration, rent, etc. Charges which vary in direct ratio to volume include direct labour and materials, commissions, etc. In the third category are such items as export advertising, travelling expenses, clerical costs, etc.

In a market where very keen competition is being faced, a careful examination of the relationships between these cost categories may be the means of determining whether a price can be quoted which will be competitive, or in other words, whether an export order can be obtained at all. In many organizations, export business represents only a comparatively small percentage of the total turnover and, in such cases, it may be argued that, where necessary, an export price which covers the variable and controllable export costs but disregards all or a portion of the fixed charges will still be profitable from the point of view of the overall operation. In such an organization, it may be assumed that the fixed expenses will be the same whether or not this export business is added to the domestic business. The export order, so obtained, is therefore a means of employing plant capacity, which may not otherwise be profitably engaged, and to absorb a portion, though not by domestic standards its full share, of the fixed expenses of the business.

If, however, export business represents more than, say, 15% to 20% of the total turnover, it may be clearly impossible to charge the whole of the fixed expenses of the organization against that part of the production which is sold in the domestic market, as this may price these products out of the domestic market.

Price Quotations and Foreign Trade Terms

A significant factor in the quotation of prices is the cost of transporting the goods to the point of delivery indicated in the sales contract. This point is designated by certain internationally accepted "foreign trade terms."

The foreign trade terms indicate the geographic point in the line of connection between seller and buyer up to which the seller pays all transportation and insurance costs (or in other words, includes transportation and insurance costs in his quotation) and from which point onwards the buyer pays all transportation or insurance costs (or in other words, from which point onwards the seller adds transportation and insurance costs to his quotation in case he, acting on behalf of the buyer, prepays these expenses). The foreign trade terms further define in the line of connection between seller and buyer the point of delivery, which means the point up to which the seller holds title to the goods and is therefore responsible for them as far as damages, losses, etc., are concerned and where the title then passes from the seller to the buyer, who from this point onwards is responsible for any losses or damages.

As one proceeds along this line of connection from the seller to the buyer, it will progressively become easier for the buyer to calculate his landed costs. If one quotes, for instance, "F.O.B. Factory", which is often called "ex works", then the buyer, in order to arrive at his landed costs, would not only have to figure out his import Customs Duty, the landing charges in his own port of arrival, the ocean freight and marine insurance, but he would also have to know the inland transport in the country of supply such as for instance, the cost of transporting the merchandise from Winnipeg to Montreal; it is quite clear that it would be difficult for the importer in a faraway country to obtain information on the cost of inland rail transport in Canada, which, in the case of an "F.O.B. Factory" or "ex works" quotation would be necessary to permit him to figure out his landed costs. If we quote "F.A.S. Vessel" (Free Along Side) or "F.O.B. Vessel" (Free on Board Vessel) at a named Port of Sailing, then, in order to arrive at his landed costs, he would only have to know the ocean freight rate, marine insurance rate and the actual landing costs and Customs Duties which occur in his own country.

With competition becoming keener all the time and with exporters in other countries used to making it easy for their overseas customers to figure out their landed costs, it has become necessary to proceed in one's quotations along this line of connection between seller and buyer to points closer to the buyer, and to quote prices for delivery at the port of destination such as for instance: C & F (Cost and Freight, which would only leave to the buyer to figure out and pay the marine insurance premium); or: C.I.F. (which means Cost, Insurance excluding war risk insurance, and Freight); or: C.I.F. & C. (which with the last letter "C" includes also the commission which the buyer may possibly pay to a buying house or broker whom he may employ in the country of supply); or, the quotation may even be: C.I.F.C. & I. (which with the last letter "I" indicates that also bank interest, in the case of extended credit terms, is included in the quotation and will not have to be added to the quoted price by the buyer).

Foreign Trade Terms—Definitions

In an effort to define in a uniform manner certain well known terms generally used in making price quotations, there has been developed in various countries a set of rules or definitions which have been adopted by certain trade organizations and others setting out in some detail the obligations of seller and buyer attaching to the particular terms. In the United States the National Foreign Trade Council Incorporated, the National Council of American Importers Incorporated, and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America on July 30, 1941, through a joint committee, approved of what are known as "Revised American Foreign Trade Definitions —1941." These follow in general, although not in detail, the International Rules for the Interpretation of Trade Terms — generally known as "Incoterms, 1953," defined by the International Chamber of Commerce. It should be understood that the use of such rules is optional and that the approval of the particular rules referred to by designated trade bodies does not lend to them the force of law. Nevertheless, where a price quotation in accordance with these definitions and a contract of sale is concluded with a statement that the price is subject to these definitions, it would have considerable force in determining what is understood by the parties to the contract in respect to such price quotation.

While specific reference has been made to the "Revised American Foreign Trade Definitions—1941" and to "Incoterms 1953," it is essential to bear in mind, as previously pointed out, that foreign trade definitions have been issued by organizations in various parts of the world and the courts of different countries have interpreted these definitions in different ways. To reduce the opportunities for misunderstanding to a minimum, therefore, it is fundamental that there be agreement between seller and buyer as to what is actually meant when a price quotation is made. A buyer in a foreign country who is familiar with definitions endorsed by an organization in the foreign country and the court decisions interpreting such definitions, on receiving a price quotation from a seller in Canada is constrained to construe it in the light of such definition unless the quotation is clarified by a stipulation as to what definitions apply in making the price quotation.

In addition to the commonly used terms, there are many others, some of which are found in particular trades only. Where definitions are not formally approved and adopted by trade organizations for general use, it is necessary that a seller and buyer should specify exactly what is understood in respect thereto, indicating the obligations of both parties so that there may be no misunderstanding. In respect to "C.I.F." contracts, it further should be pointed out that the International Law Association adopted certain rules relating thereto in 1928 which, as later modified in 1931, are known as the "Warsaw-Oxford Rules."

An extensive list of technical abbreviations used in foreign trade and exchange transactions is given in Appendix II.

SHIPPING AND MARINE INSURANCE

In the conduct of export trade it is essential that meticulous care be exercised in understanding and complying with the requirements of the buyer and the importing country, as well as Canadian Government regulations where they apply. Mistakes and misunderstandings can be costly, and, because of the distances involved, can give rise to lengthy delays. This is more fully developed in the comments appearing under the caption "Documentation".

It is equally important that careful consideration be given to the packing of the goods. Packing must be strong enough to withstand the stresses to which such shipments are exposed in the numerous handlings and stowage in the ship's hold, and thus protect the contents against physical and chemical damage, as well as against pilferage, but at the same time should be designed so as not to unnecessarily increase the cost, including freight cost. Containerization, whereby the goods are enclosed in a transferable box, often owned by the carrier, which when emptied is utilized further in transportation, is a packaging mode that is receiving greater attention. The marking of the packages or pieces should be durable in character and should be such as to properly identify and aid in the carriage of the shipment to its destination.

Care should also be exercised in the selection of the transportation routing, and in properly describing the goods in the bill of lading to assure that the most favourable ocean rate may be applied.

There are frequent year-round sailings from Canadian Eastern and Western Seaboard ports to most foreign countries. There are also direct sailings from a number of ports on the St. Lawrence River and Great Lakes to many overseas ports during the season of St. Lawrence-Great Lakes navigation, roughly from the middle of April to the end of November.

Ocean carriers enjoy immunity from liability for loss or damage caused by perils of the seas and a wide range of risks under the statutes of many maritime countries and the conditions of carriage embodied in the ocean bill of lading. Marine insurance, which is designed to afford protection to those having an interest in the goods, against perils from which the ocean carrier is relieved from liability is, therefore, an indispensable adjunct of ocean commerce. Cargo coverage is a specialized field which can not be described here except in a very cursory manner. There are three main types of cargo coverage available—F.P.A. (Free of Particular Average); W.P.A. (With Particular Average); and "All Risks" (i.e. all physical loss or damage from external causes), together with many variations of these three main forms of coverage which are employed in insuring particular cargoes. It is important for the foreign trader to realize that a marine insurance policy is a valued policy and that the value declared should be of such amount that in the event of a casualty, the assured will be fully reimbursed for the losses sustained. War risks and the inclusion of coverage against losses resulting from strikes, riots and civil commotion are not embraced in a marine policy but may be added thereto by endorsement or issuance of a separate policy. If it is desired to have insurance attach from time the shipment leaves the exporter's factory to the time of its arrival at the premises of the consignee, this may be arranged by the addition of "Marine Extension Clauses" to the policy so as to afford protection from "warehouse to warehouse".

Export shipments may be insured under a specific policy issued for a particular shipment, or an exporter may arrange for a floating policy to cover all his shipments properly declared through a copy of the individual insurance certificate sent to the Insurance Company. Various other clauses are available to meet the particular requirements of the assured, and it is consequently necessary that the underwriter have full knowledge of the insurance buyer's marketing practices and trading methods in order that a marine policy may be "tailor made" to afford satisfactory protection. This usually can be arranged whether the insurance buyer's interest is of a direct or contingent nature. The exporter should accordingly consult a reliable marine insurance broker in order to obtain a policy which best suits his particular needs and the requirements of his customer abroad.

In recent years there has been a considerable expansion in international air freight services which has been stimulated by technological advancement particularly apparent in such areas as carrying capacity, speed, handling and terminal services. This mode of carriage has succeeded in attracting progressively larger volumes of cargo in the development of overseas markets for products which, if dependent upon older surface means of transport, would probably never have materialized. This mode of expedited transportation is especially appealing to exporters of valuable or seasonal merchandise, perishable products, repair parts and traffic of an emergency nature requiring fast despatch, but its attractions apply to an ever increasing range of other products. While air freight charges are normally much higher than charged by surface carriers for the preponderance of overseas traffic, the freight in many cases is only one factor to be considered in determining the over-all distribution costs. Frequently there are offsetting advantages in the use of this mode of carriage, such as less expensive packing, reduced inventory charges, lower insurance costs and other less tangible benefits which may make it profitable to use air cargo service.

The liability of the air carriers is limited in amount and to the negligence of itself, its servants, agents and employees, acting within the scope of their authority. All risk insurance may be arranged through the carrier or an insurance company.

DOCUMENTATION

In preparing the documentation for export shipments there are two principal considerations to be borne in mind, accuracy and time. In all aspects of export trade it is essential that care be taken in meticulously meeting the requirements of the buyer and the regulations of the importing country. Errors and irregularities may result in heavy fines or the assessment of excessive rates of duty in the importing country. In addition to the requirements of the country of destination the exporter should take care to ensure that the documents provided are in accordance with the terms of the letter of credit, where payment is being made by this means. In some instances documents that are not required by the customs authority of the importing country are specified in the letter of credit and if they are not correctly provided it may be difficult or impossible for the exporter to receive payment. The second consideration is that ample time should be allowed for the preparation of documents prior to the required date of shipment. Often printed forms have to be secured from consulates, completed and submitted to the consulate for visé and considerable delays can result should the consul not be available when the documents are submitted or if, for example, they are presented on a national holiday of the consul's country.

There are several documents required for most overseas shipments, each of which is a study in itself:

(a) Ocean Bill of Lading—which may be a Straight Bill authorizing delivery of the goods to the named consignee, or an Order Bill which requires presentation of a negotiable original in order to claim the shipment (may require legalization by the Consul of the country to which the goods are consigned);

In Air Cargo the Air Waybill is the instrument equivalent to the bill of lading.

(b) The Commercial Invoice (may require legalization by the Consul of the importing country, and may also require certification as to origin and value of the goods by a competent authority such as the Canadian Manufacturers' Association);

(c) The Insurance Policy or Certificate;

(d) A draft or Bill of Exchange whose tenor reflects the terms of payment agreed between exporter and buyer;

(e) Customs Invoice or Certificate of Origin (Commonwealth countries);

(f) Consular Invoice and/or Certificate of Origin (for non-Commonwealth countries) which may be subject to certification by the Consul of the country concerned (many non-Commonwealth countries require, in addition, an endorsation or certificate as to origin and value of the goods, signed by a competent authority such as the Canadian Manufacturers' Association);

(g) Packing list;

(h) Import License and/or Exchange Permit must, in the case of certain countries, be obtained from the importer and presented when applying for consular visa of customs documents. In the case of some countries it is sufficient if the number of the import license is indicated on all documents.

(i) As far as Canadian Government regulations are concerned, Export Entry Form B-13 is to be furnished for all commercial shipments and an Export Permit may be required depending upon the nature of the goods and the country of ultimate destination.

Where imported materials or parts are used in, wrought into, attached to, or consumed in the manufacture of articles in Canada, and such articles are subsequently exported, the Canadian Government allows a drawback of 99% of all duties and taxes paid on such imported materials or parts. The claim form is known as K-32 and, if the importer of the materials or parts is not the manufacturer claiming the drawback, it will be necessary for the latter to secure from the Canadian importer a certificate of importation and sale. There are certain documents that have to be presented with the claim for drawback, such as the export invoice and the export entry form. An extra copy of the latter (Form B-13) should be completed and handed to the transportation company or parcel post authorities along with the other copies, with a note thereon requesting that the Collector of Customs (at the last port from which the goods leave Canada) stamp, sign and return it to the exporter for export drawback purposes.

In all these matters, the exporter who is unfamiliar with the procedure or with the requirements of the market to which he is shipping should consult the Department of Trade and Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and other expert advisers, and he may find it advisable to engage the services of a competent international freight forwarder. The Tariff Department of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association can supply members with summaries of the customs documentation requirements of any country, and time should be allowed to study these requirements well in advance of making a shipment.

FOREIGN LICENSING AGREEMENTS

For a variety of reasons arising from the growing industrialization of overseas markets and the increasing pressure of competition from third countries, a situation may be faced where the continuing export of finished goods becomes unprofitable. In these circumstances, the manufacturer may consider the desirability of starting a manufacturing operation abroad, perhaps through a foreign license agreement. Such an arrangement may produce a number of worthwhile results, such as a tactical advantage in the market concerned and in adjoining markets, the monetary return from the export of "know how", the mutual exchange of technical information with the licensee, and the possibility of a continued or increasing volume of exports of components. The operation of a foreign licensing programme involves a much lower capital commitment than direct investment in manufacturing facilities abroad, but there is correspondingly less control over the operation. Any such undertaking requires a most careful investigation and study, and the difficulties should not be under-estimated.

BIBLIOGRAPHY OF EXPORT REFERENCES

An exporter will find the accumulation of a small basic reference library an invaluable aid in the operation of an export department. In addition, a loose-leaf system of references arranged alphabetically by countries will enable the export manager to keep current information on hand relating to the markets of specific interest to the company, with particular reference to its own products. Under each country the documentation requirements should be set out according to the various general divisions, namely: ocean freight, parcel post, rail, air parcel post, air cargo and express. Under these in turn should be listed the names of the customs documents and the data required for each. If possible, typical forms should be included in the loose-leaf book and, by way of example, information should be typed in under the various columns. Space should be reserved for amendments and from time to time as required the information should be reconsolidated. The date the information is compiled should be noted as well as the date of any amendments and their source. In this way the exporter will have a date to check from for documents in future shipments.

The following is a list of basic reference works which can find a useful place in any export department.

GOVERNMENT EXPORT SERVICES

Canadian firms and individuals interested in export trade may obtain guidance and assistance from the Department of Trade and Commerce, including its corps of trade commissioners in sixty-six capitals and commercial centres around the world. The primary responsibility of its officers is to explore new avenues to the markets of all countries, and to maintain the highways of trade in constant repair.

Commodity officers in Ottawa familiarize themselves with the operations of firms all across Canada and the nature of their products. Inquiries from Canadian trade commissioners abroad or other sources are channelled to Canadian firms able to meet the demand, along with available information concerning the prospective purchaser. They often urge participation in trade fairs or specialized trade shows, where it is believed the provision of a Canadian display will create a better understanding of products that can be sold in the country concerned on the basis of price, quality, continuity of supply and service.

New firms with an export potential should communicate with the Department, and furnish pertinent information on their operations and products, thereby enabling the commodity officer to determine their ability to compete in markets abroad. They are also urged to take part in trade fairs in which the Department plans to participate.

Other departmental officers are engaged in trade and tariff negotiations in an effort to create the most favourable atmosphere in which commercial transactions may be conducted. Close contacts are maintained with industry, with a view to the utilization of excess manufacturing capacity, the establishment of branch plants and the development of new products. Promotional literature is prepared, primarily for distribution at international trade fairs, and a wide range of information is made available to businessmen interested in export trade.

Commercial intelligence, which includes reviews of economic conditions in many lands, trade and tariff regulations, commodity requirements and industrial developments, is made available in Foreign Trade. This illustrated fortnightly magazine is published by the Department for the information of exporters and importers. A list of Canadian trade commissioners, showing their addresses, is published in every third issue, while lists of commercial representatives of other countries in Canada appear at periodic intervals, together with lists of senior personnel at head office in Ottawa to whom inquiries can be directed.

Most of the articles in this magazine are written by trade commissioners in the field, who are familiar with markets in their territories and are well known in the principal business communities. Changes in import controls and other regulations are recorded, and trade notes that might suggest profitable export business appear in all issues.

The itineraries of trade commissioners on tour in Canada are published in Foreign Trade so that exporters and prospective exporters may communicate with them when these officers are in their immediate vicinity.

The subscription to Foreign Trade is $5.00 a year in Canada and $7.00 abroad. Orders may be placed with the Queen's Printer, Government Printing Bureau, Ottawa.

The Department's Trade Fairs Abroad Division co-ordinates participation in international trade fairs in other countries in order that the fullest advantage may be derived from the promotional effort of the Department, in co-operation with Canadian firms for whose products a market can be developed in the countries concerned.

Businessmen requiring guidance in their foreign trade transactions may communicate with trade commissioners, commodity officers with specialized knowledge of their particular products, tariff experts or other officers of the Department. One or more branches may be required to provide the necessary assistance in solving particular problems, and in securing a market for Canadian products. Inquiries directed to the Department or to an individual are funnelled to the branch best qualified to provide the desired service.

TRADE COMMISSIONER SERVICE

The Trade Commissioner Service, with headquarters at Ottawa, has offices under the direction of Canadian government trade commissioners in many countries of the trading world. A director, aided by an executive director and three assistant directors, is responsible for the work of the Service at home and abroad.

There are 67 trade offices abroad, located in most of the strategic commercial centres of the world. In addition to the trade commissioner, many offices have one or more assistant trade commissioners, depending upon the importance of the post to Canadian trade. In those centres where Canada maintains a diplomatic mission, the trade commissioner is attached to the mission as a commercial diplomatic officer and is given the title of Minister (Commercial), Minister Counsellor (Economic), Commercial Counsellor, Commercial Secretary or Assistant Commercial Secretary, according to his rank. When attached to consular posts, he carries the title Consul-General, Deputy Consul-General (Commercial), Consul (Commercial), or Vice-Consul (Commercial), according to his rank and whether the post is a consulate-general or consulate.

The duties of the trade commissioner are to introduce Canadian exporters and importers to the corresponding businessmen of other countries; to study conditions and needs of the territories where they are located; to obtain and forward inquiries for Canadian goods to headquarters at Ottawa and to Canadian exporters; to report on important requirements in their territories and to make direct inquiries or conduct preliminary surveys regarding the potential market for any product, reporting the exact kinds of goods wanted, competition to be met, methods of packing, shipping or billing, tariffs and trade regulations affecting these goods, and other pertinent information.

Trade commissioners assist Canadian importers and manufacturers who desire advice on the present and prospective supply of goods and materials available in various countries, best methods of purchase, methods of approach to overseas suppliers, prices, specifications, packing, etc.

Trade developments the world over are reported by trade commissioners to the Department at Ottawa, and this information is available to all Canadian exporters and importers. They also prepare periodic reports on trade, business and financial conditions, markets for particular commodities, materials available for supply for import into Canada, and other related subjects for publication in Foreign Trade or in pamphlet form.

Trade Commissioners' Tours

The periodic return of trade commissioners for official tours of Canada is one of the most important factors in effecting practical cooperation between Canadian firms interested in export trade and businessmen in other countries. The trade commissioner can, during the course of his tour, discuss export and import problems with firms interested in exporting to, or importing from, his territory. The Department brings back trade commissioners by rotation, subject to the exigencies of trading conditions and of the Service generally. Well in advance of their scheduled arrival in Canada, individual exporters and importers are circularized for the purpose of arranging appointments. In addition, the Department publishes a notice in Foreign Trade inviting firms that may be interested in any particular territory to state whether an interview is desired. The names of such firms, together with the names of those with whom the trade commissioner has been in communication, form the basis of the itinerary. Businessmen wishing to interview any trade commissioner on tour may do so by communicating in advance with the Trade Commissioner Service or with the Canadian Manufacturers' Association or the local chamber of commerce.

Assistance Available from Trade Commissioners

Canadian exporters can obtain assistance and information from branches and divisions of the Department of Trade and Commerce, including officers of the Trade Commissioner Service in posts abroad. Similar guidance is available to overseas traders interested in the development of closer commercial relations with this country.

In addition to the information Canadian trade commissioners can provide direct, the Department of Trade and Commerce maintains a number of services in Ottawa which will prove helpful to prospective exporters. Preliminary inquiries should be submitted to the Industrial Materials Branch, the Manufacturing Industries & Engineering Branch or the Agriculture and Fisheries Branch, when related to specific products, and to the appropriate geographical division of the Office of Trade Relations, when dealing with tariffs, trade restrictions, licensing, etc. Other departmental arms that can render special services are the Trade Services Branch and the Trade Publicity Branch.

Canadian exporters should ask to be listed in the Exporter's Directory, which is maintained by the Trade Services Branch and supplied to trade commissioners throughout the world.

A list of trade commissioners, showing their territories, is published periodically in Foreign Trade. The specific information obtainable from trade commissioners is listed below for the convenience of exporters.

The duties of trade commissioners bring them into daily contact with the government, importers, exporters, and the general business community of those countries to which they are accredited. They know the requirements, the business methods and the problems of the market concerned. This practical knowledge is available for exporters to draw on.

The following topics suggest some of the ways in which the trade commissioner can help the exporter to promote the sale of Canadian goods abroad.

Assessing a New Market Abroad:

If a Canadian firm is considering a market abroad for the first time, the trade commissioner can supply information on the following:

Market Requirements:

(a) whether a particular commodity, or one similar to it, is in use in the area;
(b) by whom it is used, and for what purpose;
(c) whether the country's requirements are met by local production, by imports, or by both;
(d) if a commodity is not in use, the probable reason, the possibilities of developing a market for it, and how this might be done.

Import Trade:

(a) size of the import market;
(b) sources of imports;
(c) the pattern of imports, and prospects for the future;
(d) how the import trade is managed — by wholesalers, commission agents, etc.

Tariff and Trade Regulations:

(a) customs classifications;
(b) rates of duty;
(c) comparability of tariff treatment Canada receives with that of competing countries;
(d) nature of import and exchange controls.

Competition in the Market:

(a) who the competitors are;
(b) the range of their products;
(c) how long competing products have been established in the market;
(d) the status of local representatives of foreign firms, and any special assistance they receive from their principals;
(e) prevailing prices and suppliers' terms of credit.

General:

(a) how to quote in the market;
(b) available banking, shipping, storage, and brokerage facilities;
(c) prevailing economic conditions and their bearing on marketing possibilities;
(d) business conditions as they affect a principal industry if such industry represents a prime consumer in the area.

Establishing a New Exporter in the Market:

If the Canadian exporter decides that prospects are encouraging, the trade commissioner can assist the firm in establishing itself in a new market in the following ways:

(a) by selecting firms suitable as agents, introducing the Canadian firm's commodity lines to them, and determining their interest in taking on the representation;
(b) by placing the Canadian supplier in direct contact with those firms that express an interest in further discussions on the matter of representation;
(c) by supplying credit and other information on the local firms to assist the Canadian company in deciding which of these would be the most appropriate contact. Normally, the trade commissioner will include his own recommendation at this time.
(d) If the trade commissioner considers it advisable, he will encourage a representative of the Canadian firm to visit the market and, in order to make such a visit as profitable as possible, is prepared to:
 — arrange necessary appointments,
 — make reservations for accommodation,
 — receive and care for the visitor's mail and other messages,
 — help out with any interpreting that is required, or if this is not possible from his own office, recommend suitable alternative arrangements.
 — recommend legal counsel or any other technical type of assistance required for negotiation purposes,
 — be available for any explanation or additional information required.

Continuing Assistance:

Once a Canadian firm is established and goods are moving into the market the trade commissioner can continue to be of assistance in the following ways:

(a) by maintaining close contact with and encouraging the new agent;
(b) by interceding on behalf of the exporters with local authorities if problems arise as a result of exchange, import, or other trade controls;
(c) by making recommendations leading to the settlement of trade disputes;
(d) by using his knowledge and the contacts he has developed to cut red tape, smooth out difficulties and help keep Canadian trade moving;
(e) although the trade commissioner cannot be considered in any sense of the word as a debt collector, he is always prepared to give guidance concerning the recovery of overdue accounts.

Co-operation by the Exporter:

The Canadian exporter can co-operate with the trade commissioner in many ways. When making inquiries concerning a potential market

DO:

(a) Provide a short history of his company, particularly if new to the market or to the trade commissioner.
(b) Specifically mention whether he is a manufacturer, export agent, jobber, etc.
(c) Indicate whether the company is currently exporting, and if so, to what markets.
(d) Give details of the methods of distribution normally used in other markets.

(e) Advise if the firm has ever sold to the market under study, if there were previous agents in the territory, if these connections still exist, and what their relationship would be with the fresh contacts sought.

(f) Furnish catalogues supplemented by sufficient information to provide the following minimum of detail on the product:
- — description and physical characteristics,
- — trade name,
- — qualities, grades and sizes the product comes in,
- — minimum quantities shipped for export,
- — export packaging,
- — production and delivery schedule,
- — any specific features or selling points,
- — terms of payment normally required,
- — prices, C.I.F., principal port of entry in the foreign market, or as otherwise recommended by the trade commissioner.

(g) Follow up market research by personal attention and visits to the area.

There are two "Don'ts" to add in connection with the latter point. When a personal visit to the market is planned

DON'T:

(1) Forget to tell the trade commissioner well in advance that you are coming, the objective of your visit, and what you would like him to do before you arrive.

(2) Cut your visit so short that it loses its practical advantages.

COMMODITIES BRANCHES

There are three commodity branches in the Department: the Agriculture and Fisheries Branch; the Industrial Materials Branch and the Manufacturing Industries and Engineering Branch. The Agriculture and Fisheries Branch is concerned with grains, feeds, livestock, animal products, furs, foods, beverages and tobacco. The Industrial Materials Branch is concerned with chemicals, forest products, metals and minerals. The Manufacturing Industries and Engineering Branch is responsible for appliances, commercial machinery, electronic and mechanical equipment, textiles and consumer goods. These branches maintain liaison with the export community advising of business opportunities abroad. They also keep Canada's trade commissioners informed of commodities available from Canadian exporters. Many of these functions are carried out by commodity officers, specialists in commodity trade, who are assigned to various divisions representing the major industrial and agricultural groups.

Officers of this branch ensure that export opportunities uncovered by the Department's promotional activities are made known to Canadian businessmen and that exporters are aware of the services the Department offers. Commodity officers help perform a variety of specialized trade promotion programs. Included are plant visits and interviews, preparation of trade studies, market surveys, commodity and area development programs. In co-operation with the Canadian Government Exhibition Commission and the Trade Fairs and Missions Branch, the officers work on displays of Canadian products and services in international trade fairs. In addition they accompany groups of Canadian businessmen abroad assessing the market potential of particular products.

TRADE POLICY SERVICES

Office of Trade Relations

The Office of Trade Relations—formerly the International Trade Relations Branch—has major responsibilities in the development and conduct of Canada's trade and commercial relations with other countries. In addition to participation in trade and tariff negotiations, the Office provides immediate and direct service to Canadian exporters through initiating consultation with other governments on particular trade problems, and through supplying detailed and up-to-date information on foreign tariffs, import and exchange controls and other foreign regulations and restrictions affecting export sales of their products.

The Office of Trade Relations has five area divisions: the United States; Commonwealth; Europe; Asia and Middle East; and Latin America. The Area Divisions are the central points of contact between trade offices abroad. They also maintain general information on the economic situation and market conditions in the countries for which they are responsible and should, whenever possible, be consulted by Canadian businessmen before travelling abroad. In addition the Office has a Commodity Trade Policies Division, an International Organizations Division, a Financing and Aid Division, and a General Relations Division.

The Office follows closely commercial and economic developments at home and abroad to enable views to be formulated in the interests of Canadian trade. In respect of trade and tariff negotiations detailed preparatory work is carried out through trade analysis and in consultation with trading interests with a view to expanding export opportunities for Canadian products. This preparatory work is followed through in the direct process of negotiation with other countries. Close attention is paid to the conduct of Canadian trade with particular reference to Canada's rights and obligations under international agreements and arrangements. When Canadian trading interests are adversely affected or threatened by actions of other countries, appropriate remedial action is initiated. Such action includes efforts to find practical solutions to particular tariff problems, to obtain the relaxation of quantitative restrictions and, in general, to work for the removal of barriers to Canadian exports to other countries. In the interests of Canadian trade, the Office participates in the formulation of recommendations concerning Canada's export financing and bilateral and multilateral aid programs. It also participates in international consultations on these matters.

To assist Canadian firms in their export trade, the Office maintains complete and up-to-date information on customs regulations and tariffs, import and exchange controls, documentation requirements, sanitary marking and labelling regulations, and other regulations and requirements of other countries directly affecting trade. Details of these regulations are supplied on request. New measures in this field are publicized through the Department's official publication, Foreign Trade, and by bulletins.

Office of Commodity Trade Policy

This Office has two principal tasks. The first is to undertake detailed studies on a commodity or industry sector basis to provide guidance in the formulation of trade and related policies. Accomplishing this requires close liaison with the work other departments do involving domestic industry. The objective is to develop new export opportunities and particularly to increase the participation of highly processed and manufactured goods in Canada's export performance.

The second responsibility is the negotiation of international commodity arrangements and related activities covering commodities important in Canada's export and import trade. This involves advancing Canadian interests in the solution of specific commodity policy problems through international organizations and agencies such as the GATT, UNCTAD, FAO, OECD, the international commodity councils for wheat, sugar, coffee and tin and various international commodity study groups when trade policy considerations are involved. Close contact is maintained with commodity experts in the Department, in other government departments and agencies and with the representatives of Canadian producers, importers and industry associations.

The Office has two branches, each with two divisions. One branch is responsible for primary products, with a division each for agricultural products and resource industries. The second deals with processed products, and comprises a division for industrial materials and one for secondary industries.

TRADE PUBLICITY BRANCH

The function of the Trade Publicity Branch is, in co-operation with other branches of the Department, to stimulate the sale of Canadian commodities in other lands. It is responsible for the preparation of trade promotional literature for distribution at international trade fairs and, through trade commissioners, to businessmen in their territories. Other literature is made available for use by the press in other lands. Advertising in trade publications abroad, in support of promotional campaigns for groups of commodities and Canada's participation in trade fairs, is also the responsibility of this Branch.

It acquaints Canadian businessmen in particular, and the public in general, with the many services obtainable from the Department, at home and abroad. It also aims to stimulate in Canada a greater appreciation of the importance of export trade, and to cultivate an informed approach to foreign trade transactions. Foreign businessmen are urged to consider Canada as a possible source of supply for goods required by them, and as a market for their own commodities.

The principal media through which information is made available to Canadian businessmen are news releases issued by the Department, and Foreign Trade, in which reports from trade commissioners on market and economic conditions in their territories. Articles by commodity officers and other personnel of the department, and a wide variety of commercial intelligence are also published.

TRADE FAIRS AND MISSIONS BRANCH

The Trade Fairs and Missions Branch was established in 1962 to develop and implement the Department's export promotion programmes in the field of trade missions and exhibits in foreign trade fairs. The Branch consists of two divisions, the Trade Fairs Abroad Division and the Trade Missions Division.

The Trade Fairs Abroad Division is responsible to develop recommendations for participation in appropriate foreign trade fairs which, when approved, make up the Department's annual trade fair programme. More than a hundred exhibitions in all parts of the world are examined each year before selecting those deemed to be best suited to the needs of Canadian exporters.

The Trade Fairs Division is also responsible for coordinating the planning of each exhibit in the schedule. It establishes a planning committee for each project to determine the nature and content of the exhibit, including publicity and advertising. Trade Fair Officers of the Division act as chairmen of the planning groups. This Division is responsible for evaluation of trade fair participations to ensure that Canadian manufacturers can look forward to good export opportunities when displaying their products in an exhibit sponsored by the Department of Trade and Commerce.

The Trade Missions Division has as its functions the development of the Department's annual trade mission programmes and the organization of all trade missions, both incoming and outgoing, sponsored by the Department. The Division also acts as the liaison point for trade missions organized by other agencies and for which the assistance of the Department is required.

The Department's trade missions are designed to perform a variety of functions ranging from the exploitation of sales possibilities for a particular commodity to the exploration of changes in exporting techniques necessary to improve sales prospects of Canadian goods. In recognition of these functions and since missions must remain relatively small to be effective, invitations to participate in outgoing missions are extended to Canadian business leaders whose status in their particular industry ensures that the whole industry will benefit from the information obtained by the mission. Each outgoing mission is expected to prepare a report of its findings which is distributed within the industry concerned and to other interested parties in Canada.

Incoming missions normally consist of foreign businessmen and/or government officials who are brought to Canada to view Canadian products and the capacity of Canadian industry to supply their requirements.

Both types of missions are used by the Department not only for the benefit of industrial products but also to promote agricultural sales and tourism.

TRANSPORTATION AND TRADE SERVICES BRANCH

The Transportation and Trade Services Branch provides various trade-supporting services. Its principal functions are:

(a) To undertake studies of transportation problems affecting the export of Canadian goods with a view to finding solutions, and to examine the structure of freight tariffs established by the various ocean shipping conferences and other carriers, and their influence on Canadian exports. It will also follow developments in the transportation industry relating to containerization and packaging.

(b) To administer the regional offices of the Department in Canada, and to maintain through those offices close liaison with the provincial departments of trade and industry, with manufacturers and other commercial interests.

(c) To administer the Export and Import Permits Act, and to provide firms with information on export and import control regulations. The Branch participates in international conferences on export control matters and strategic control policy.

(d) To maintain liaison with other departments and agencies of Government concerned in matters of transportation and to provide representation on various boards and committees within and outside the Government service that deal with policies or technical aspects of transportation and export shipping.

(e) To compile and maintain the Department's confidential directory of exporters for use by Canadian trade commissioners and other officers of the Department both in Canada and abroad.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT EXHIBITION COMMISSION

The Canadian Government Exhibition Commission is responsible for the planning, organization and administration of all Canadian exhibits in fairs and exhibitions abroad in which the Canadian Government participates. In addition, the Commission advises private exhibitors and their agents on the best means of displaying Canadian products at overseas fairs.

Within Canada the Exhibition Commission is responsible for carrying out the exhibit and display programs of individual federal departments and agencies, and for the organization of international fairs and exhibitions financed and sponsored by the Canadian Government.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE CORPORATION (ECIC)

ECIC was established by Act of Parliament in 1944. Administered by a Board of Directors, including the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Deputy Minister of Finance, the Corporation insures exporters against non-payment by foreign buyers due to some of the major risks of loss involved in foreign trade. The Head Office is in Ottawa and branch offices are maintained in Montreal and Toronto. It is represented in Vancouver, Edmonton, Winnipeg and Halifax by Regional Officers of the Department of Trade and Commerce. An Advisory Council, consisting of members from all parts of Canada representing the services of banking, manufacturing industries and the primary industries of farming, fishing, lumbering and mining, meets from time to time with the Directors and Officers of ECIC to discuss its operations and to advise on policy matters.

ECIC operates in two fields: export credits insurance and long-term financing.

Insurance is available under three main classifications:

(a) consumer goods sold on short credit terms which are usual for the particular trade concerned;
(b) capital goods sold on medium credit terms which often extend over a few years;
(c) services.

Consumer Goods Policies are issued to cover an exporter's entire sales for a period of a year, with renewal privileges, whereas Capital Goods Policies are issued on an individual basis to cover each specific contract of sale. Services Policies are issued on either a blanket or an individual basis.

The risks insured by export credits insurance policies include: insolvency or protracted default on the part of the buyer; repudiation where proceedings against the buyer would serve no useful purpose; exchange restrictions in the buyer's country preventing the transfer of funds to Canada; cancellation of an import licence or the imposition of restrictions on the import of goods not previously subject to restriction; the occurrence of war between the buyer's country and Canada, or of war, revolution, etc., in the buyer's country; cancellation or non-renewal of an export permit and the imposition of restrictions on the export of goods not previously subject to restrictions; and additional transport or insurance charges occasioned by interruption or diversion of voyage outside Canada or the continental United States of America.

Premium rates for this insurance protection are nominal and have averaged less than 1% on all business done by ECIC to date. Policies are issued on a co-insurance basis and ECIC insures exporters up to 90% of the selling price.

Proceeds of any loss under a policy may be assigned to banks and thus the policy will prove an aid in financing.

In cases of insured export sales of capital equipment made on medium term credit, ECIC may provide unconditional guarantees to banks which agree to finance the exporter on a non-recourse basis.

Under section 21A of the Export Credits Insurance Act, which ECIC administers for the federal government, the Corporation may be authorized to provide long-term financing for an export transaction involving capital goods and related services. Such financing is available only in cases where credit terms in excess of five years are clearly necessary and justifiable.

The minimum value of transactions qualifying for long-term export financing is $1 million, though this minimum does not apply when a Canadian exporter can obtain an order to supply part of a project being mainly financed by a foreign lender.

DOMINION BUREAU OF STATISTICS

The Dominion Bureau of Statistics issues detailed monthly, quarterly and annual reports on Canada's foreign trade. These are extremely useful to exporters and those interested in developing export markets, and to manufacturers and others interested in information on imports. Other statistical publications also provide useful data on other aspects of the Canadian market.

Its monthly reports on the Trade of Canada give information on trade by commodities, showing for each commodity listed the total quantity and value of the trade with individual countries. Quarterly reports record trade by countries, showing for each foreign country the quantity and value of trade for every commodity separately listed. A final annual report in three volumes provides complete statistical detail, with comparative figures for two previous years, analyses of the statistics, and information on tariff revenues. Preliminary bulletins supply advance summaries of trade information each month.

The Bureau also issues reviews of Canada's trade, which summarize and interpret the detailed statistics and direct attention to the more important changes they reveal. These figures provide businessmen with information on Canada's exports to specific countries and, to some extent, enable them to determine the sales potential for their own products.

Also available is a new series of export and import commodity classifications showing in addition to the classification, numeric and alphabetic indexes which are constantly being updated. Full details will be found in the DBS Catalogue described below.

Statistics on the Canadian balance of international payments are released in quarterly and annual reports. These can also be useful to the Canadian manufacturer in studying the international background affecting trade.

All these trade publications — together with numerous others dealing statistically with manufacturing and a wide range of Canadian economic and social activities, many of which provide useful information in planning, marketing and production programs for particular industries — are available at nominal rates from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and from the Queen's Printer, Ottawa. Information as to titles, contents and prices of its reports and bulletins is contained in the 1964 edition of the Bureau's Catalogue of Publications, copies of which may be obtained for $1.00 each.

EXTERNAL AID OFFICE

The External Aid Office was established in November, 1960, as a separate agency of the Canadian Government incorporating functions related to Canadian external aid programs formerly performed by the Department of Trade and Commerce, the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Finance and other agencies of government.

The Director General of the External Aid Office is responsible to the Secretary of State for External Affairs for the operation of Canada's programs of international development assistance.

Under these programs Canada provides a wide range of Canadian equipment, materials, commodities and engineering services as well as teachers, professors and technical advisers to help developing countries achieve satisfactory economic progress. The form of help ranges from large capital projects to small items of equipment.

Procurement is normally carried out by the Canadian Commercial Corporation acting as agent for the External Aid Office and is in accordance with Government Contracts Regulations, which as a rule call for competitive bidding. In certain cases, however, direct procurement by grantee/borrower may be authorized. Examples are: when international tenders have been called and a Canadian supplier is successful; when Canadian materials, equipment or services are purchased under an agency or trust agreement with an international organization or through a national Development Bank under a loan agreement with an eligible recipient country; or when commodities are purchased which are selling at established international prices. Normally, each proposal is screened by the External Aid Office to ensure that it can be met from Canadian sources with a high Canadian content, if possible 80% or more. When tenders are called the contract is usually awarded to the lowest bidder subject to the application of a "preference" in favour of suppliers with the higher Canadian content.

Through the technical and educational assistance side of the program, Canadians are sent abroad to advise and teach and selected personnel from developing countries are brought to Canada for training and study in a variety of fields.

The External Aid Office also administers the Commonwealth Scholarship and Fellowship Plan in Canada with the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada providing the secretarial services.

In addition, the Office co-operates with multilateral aid-giving organizations like the United Nations, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, Asian Development Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank.

The External Aid Office is located at 75 Albert Street, Ottawa.

CANADIAN DEFENCE EXPORT PROGRAM

Canada's defence exports account for a substantial part of all defence production activity in Canadian industry.

The International Programs Branch of the Department of Defence Production is responsible for the development of export markets for Canadian defence industry within the national objectives for Canadian trading activities abroad. This activity includes the fostering and developing of general relations with other countries in the field of co-operative defence research, development and production, and with developing and executing marketing plans for specific projects.

The Canada-United States Defence Production Sharing Program makes it possible for Canadian companies to participate competitively as prime contractors or subcontractors for United States defence business. The majority of Canadian defence materiel can enter the United States free of duty and exempt from the provisions of the Buy American Act.

Many interesting defence research, development, and production programs in overseas countries are also open to Canadian industry, including both NATO and national projects.

The Department of Defence Production and the Department of Industry are working together in a concerted effort to assist in the development of Canadian industry. Canadian companies interested in opportunities for defence export business should contact the Director, International Programs Branch, Department of Defence Production, Ottawa 4, Ontario.

EXPORT SERVICES OF THE CANADIAN MANUFACTURERS' ASSOCIATION

Throughout its 96 years of existence the Association has regarded the development of Canadian export trade as one of its prime objectives. Through the combined activities of its specialized head office service departments and division and branch offices across the country the Association is able to provide a complete export service to members on the techniques and procedures of exporting. The following paragraphs outline the services provided by head office departments.

Commercial Intelligence Department

Of the four head office departments concerned with export, it is the function of the Commercial Intelligence Department to stimulate interest in export activity, to guide members towards their most likely markets, and to assist in making customer contacts. The Department not only maintains a statistics and market intelligence library but also provides information on specialized subjects such as: export credits insurance and financing; trade fairs and exhibitions; foreign aid programmes; export agreements and technical abbreviations. It also provides a low cost multilingual translation service.

Legislation Department

The Association's Legislation Department provides information on new developments in commercial law, Canadian and foreign taxation, trade marks, industrial designs, patents and copyrights.

Tariff Department

The Tariff Department provides data on the requirements of foreign countries with respect to Canadian exports including: customs tariffs, preferential duties, extra import charges, valuation for duty purposes and dumping duties; country of origin, labelling and other marking requirements; passports, visas and laws affecting business travellers; import and exchange regulations and quotas. In addition, the Department covers international trade agreements and negotiations, trade areas and blocs; export entry forms and export permits, and the Canadian Government export drawback provisions for imported goods used for export purposes. It also authenticates customs documents including invoices, certificates of origin and export price lists for foreign countries.

Transportation Department

Included in the kinds of export information obtainable through the CMA's Transportation Department are: freight rates and services of the air, land and ocean carriers; rules and conditions of carriage; port charges; packaging; containerization; marine insurance; and the obligations of buyer and seller with respect to transportation and insurance under the various terms of sale generally used in international trade.

The following is an index of subjects and commonly sought CMA export services showing the departments to contact:

Export Education

The acquisition of export expertise can be, to the businessman working alone, a tedious process, spread over a long period. For the man who is constantly benefitting from experiences of others through the free and frequent interchange of knowledge, such expertise can be acquired easily and quickly.

The provision of facilities for such an interchange of knowledge has for more than 20 years been regarded as a necessary element of the Association's direct services. By means of its Export Study Club organization the Association provides a continuing program of export education for its members across the country. With six clubs operating in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and British Columbia, an organized means is available through which both new and established exporters may discuss common problems and share experiences and knowledge.

During the 1966-67 season the Export Study Clubs provided down-to-earth programs covering the techniques and procedures of exporting, in addition to examining specific export markets. Each group planned its activities to meet its own special needs. Recent special visits by Export Study Clubs have included a tour of Expo '67, a group visit to the Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, for meetings and consultations with Government officials, and a visit to Buffalo, N.Y., where a group toured U.S. Customs facilities and met with U.S. officials. Other subjects discussed included finance and credit, transportation, documentation and export services. With expertise and interest in export being developed through this unique organization of 1,200 members, enthusiasm for this type of direct service has resulted in the continued rapid growth of Club memberships.

The Association also supports, both directly and indirectly, a variety of export educational programmes across the country. It sponsors, on a continuing basis, courses in export marketing and takes part in export programmes arranged by various educational institutions across the country.

Publications

The Association from time to time publishes detailed booklets on various aspects of export trade techniques. These studies, together with other reference publications for exporters, are listed in the chapter headed "Bibliography of Export References".

Industrial Canada

The Association's official monthly magazine "Industrial Canada" is, like the CMA itself, directed towards the promotion of Canadian manufacturing industries and the specific interests of exporters. Its regular service features include timely information on foreign sales opportunities, trade fairs and exhibitions, changes in foreign customs and exchange regulations, and significant news items regarding such matters as import licensing, customs tariffs, transportation developments and export controls in Canada and in other countries. Keeping Canadian exporters up to date on all of these topics and on foreign economic developments which affect the trade climate are the monthly "Industrial Canada" features entitled "Tariff News", "International Trade and Industry", "Transportation Digest" and "Where in the World". In addition, special articles on export subjects are periodically included in "Industrial Canada's" editorial programme which is consistently planned to provide readers with expert information on the latest in proven management techniques.

Canadian Trade Index

For over sixty years "Canadian Trade Index", the Association's annual directory, has provided buyers and sellers throughout the world with detailed information to facilitate their contacts with Canadian manufacturers. With a finely-classified products section and details as to the size, type of business, brand names, foreign representation, operating executives, parent-subsidiary relationships and geographical distribution of over 12,800 manufacturers across Canada, "Canadian Trade Index" is an active and effective instrument of trade promotion. Copies are distributed to thousands of importers in over sixty countries through the co-operation of the Canadian Government Trade Commissioner Service.

Circular Service

Important matters of immediate interest to exporters and detailed technical trade data are conveyed to members with all possible speed by CMA circulars, issued at the national, divisional and branch level.

Export Trade Policy

The CMA Export Trade Committee, a joint sub-committee of the Commercial Intelligence and Tariff Committees, co-ordinates policy matters over the whole range of Association studies, services and activities in the field of export. Together with other specialized sub-committees dealing with such matters as trade policy and participation in foreign trade fairs, this Committee has responsibility for developing recommendations as to the Association's policy and action in matters affecting the export trade of member companies and having regard to the impact of imports.

The Association stands for and advocates the greatest possible trade between nations and believes that steadfast support should be given to existing international organizations and institutions in their efforts to solve the problems of world trade and finance. It recognizes that the well-being of the Canadian people depends to a great extent on the volume of Canada's export trade, which provides the means of purchasing necessary imports.

The Association believes that the extent of Canada's export trade depends to a great degree upon the ingenuity and hard work of many thousands of Canadian firms and individuals engaged in the export of foodstuffs, raw materials, manufactured goods and services. Exporters must have all possible knowledge of the trade practices and requirements covering export shipments and it is for this reason that the Association has paid so much attention to its specialized departmental services which have continuously expanded to keep abreast of the times.

In the increasingly complex modern world, however, government policy plays a growing part. Canadian Governments have always displayed a keen interest in the problems of exporters, and, wherever and whenever necessary, the Association has placed the views and recommendations of exporters before the Government concerning trade policy and its administration. Canadian manufacturers and exporters are particularly fortunate in being served by a Trade Commissioner Service which is second to none in the world, and the Association has had particularly cordial relationships with these officers who, on their Canadian tours, have made CMA offices their headquarters for over half a century.

The Association maintains close liaison with federal and provincial government departments concerned with Canada's external trade. It also co-operates with manufacturers' and businessmen's organizations in other countries in the interests of facilitating international commerce and takes an active part in the work of such international bodies as the International Chamber of Commerce, the Inter-American Council of Commerce and Production and the Canadian Business and Industry Advisory Committee for O.E.C.D.
